

One little lie. A guilty secret.
And the man she mustn't love...

It's been six years since Isy Forrester left home. In that time, she's strived to forge a new life for herself in London, away from Jack Mancini, her father's adopted son, and his devastating betrayal of everything she thought they had.

Only now her father's in hospital, and the house that's been in her family for generations is at risk. Forced to return to Devon, she finds Jack as infuriating and stubborn as ever, and just as irresistible. Soon she realises the bright lights of London can't hold a candle to him.

But Jack has a past, one which he refuses to share with her. And until he can trust her with these deepest secrets, how can she risk her heart? How can she even begin to help him, when he won't tell her what happened all those years ago – before her father brought him home to Hambledon Hall?

This story of love lost and found, when family secrets are uncovered, is a wonderfully compelling and evocative mix of emotion and intrigue.
